

Sustainable Arts: Training & Support, Creative Carbon Scotland

Measuring and reporting your environmental performance is an increasingly important part of running an arts organisation and/or venue.

Aside from the obvious environmental and cost-saving benefits, improving your environmental performance helps to build stronger relationships with funders, artists, participants, suppliers, touring promoters, staff and audiences.

Creative Carbon Scotland currently works with over 100 arts organisations in Scotland, supporting them to engage with and work towards a more sustainable Scotland. This includes running year-round training workshops and support programmes across Scotland which provide organisations with the tools and knowledge they need to measure and reduce carbon emission related to energy, water, waste and travel.

We are keen to ensure that our work is available to as wide a range of arts and cultural organisations as possible and want to hear from any arts organisations, individual artists and venues who would like to make use of this service.

Register with us now to get started or contact Fay Butler, fay@creativecarbonscotland.com to find out more.